And I think that Congress is doing the right thing in proposing that in its legislation, and I am ready, if confirmed, to tackle those new problems. And I would look forward to it. OLLINS Chairman C. Do you believe that the Commission at present is adequately staffed and has sufficient resources to take on these new responsibilities Mr. B. I would have to get down there to look at the staffing LAIR levels and determine if we have the right mix of skills available down there, if we have the right people with the right kind of talent. So I want to reserve judgment before I get down there, but I think given the new role for the Commission, it certainly envisions a more robust entity than what it is now, given that its new responsibilities are going to be much greater. And I think that going into that with my eyes wide open and realizing where Congress wants it to go would be a great benefit. OLLINS Chairman C. Mr. Bilbray and Mr. Marshall, the Collins-Carper postal reform bill is designed to foster more efficient postal operations by giving the Postal Service much more flexibility than it has now to set its own prices and to implement revised operating procedures. For market-dominant products, the average increase for each class of mail would be capped...
