Not illustrated. 1915 Excerpt: . . . that the company has built many moderate priced homes, some of the bungalow type, renting for as little as 7. 00 per month, having most of the so-called modern conveniences, permitting them to be kept in perfectly sani 1 tary and wholesome conditions, enforces self-respect through proper home life, and with self-respect comes a determination to attain other privileges and excellences. The New Jersey Zinc Company undertook its welfare work from a conviction that it would overcome the troubles which beset it and that it would ultimately prove a fine paying proposition. Results attained have confirmed its theory. There is no disposition to abandon any of the undertakings in connection with these sociological efforts. On the contrary there is a disposition to extend them and to make them farther reaching in their effects. The demonstration has produced a better, almost a model town; better, almost superior...
